thority to Act.*VON BERNSTORFF TO SAIL*Special Train Arrived at Hoboken at

By Associated Press
WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—President Wilson is expected now to defer a decision on the question of furnishing guns to American merchant ships until he decides whether to go before Congress and ask for additional authority for the protection of American ships and lives.

It was indicated in authoritative sources today that there has been no change of the policy of the government up to the present time and that none is in immediate prospect.

The accumulation of incidents involving violations of American rights since the diplomatic break with Germany is generally believed by administration officials to be hastening the approach of the hour when the President will again go before Congress.

The reiteration of the 72 Americans brought in on the prize ship Yarrowdale is regarded as another acute indication of Germany's disregard of American rights. It is in fact a vigorous protest has not already gone forward it will be sent in the near future unless Germany promptly releases the men.

The defiant sentiment gained ground in administration quarters today that the accumulation of acts indicating a disregard for American rights will have as much to do with shaping the policy of the United States as any overt act which may be committed against American ships.

While it has been indicated at the State Department that there can be no legal objection to the furnishing of guns to merchant ships, President Wilson is understood to be disinclined to take any steps which might give Germany the slightest grounds for throwing responsibility for any future trouble on the United States. This was the government's attitude, although it was admitted that there always was a possibility of change according to circumstances.

Reports of the piling up of freight destined to Europe, the temporary shutting down of grain elevators and the other evidences of the new submarine campaign upon neutral commerce are regarded as part of the accumulation of aggressions which are expected to lead to action.

So far the government has received nothing official to indicate any change of submarine policy by Germany and can only believe that American lives or ships may be sacrificed at any moment.

Vigorous denial was made today to reports of a split in the Cabinet over the question of furnishing guns to American ships.

COUNT VON BERNSTORFF
ARRIVES AT HOBOKEN

HOBOKEN, N. J., Feb. 14.—The special train carrying Count von Bernstorff, formerly German ambassador to the United States, and his suite from Washington arrived at the railroad terminal at 6:55 A. M.

The train was immediately surrounded by a guard of Hoboken police and government secret service men and no one was permitted to approach without credentials. Count von Bernstorff and his party remained in their staterooms for half an hour after the train stopped about two blocks from the dock of the Scandinavian-American line steamship Frederick VIII, on which they will sail for Copenhagen at 1 o'clock this afternoon.

The count and countess surprised the group of newspapermen, photographers and moving picture men, who were permitted to pass the police line, by appearing on the rear platform of their car. The former ambassador smilingly acknowledged the greetings of several persons he knew and for five minutes posed good naturedly for the benefit of the cameramen.

Although he exchanged informal remarks, he refused to submit to an interview.

"I am sorry," he said, "but I have nothing to say. It was all said yesterday. I am under orders."

At 7:37 o'clock the count and countess stepped into a closed automobile and were taken to the pier. They had breakfast with several of their immediate friends on board the Frederick VIII. Fifteen automobiles were on hand to transport the former ambassador and his party to the steamship pier. Prince von Hatzfeldt-Trachenberg, counselor of the German embassy, preceded the former ambassador or aboard the steamship. No effort was made to transfer all the members of the suite.

The route from the train to the pier was taken by the police and detectives and a force of 150 inspectors, one of the port was on duty at the pier. As the ambassador stepped from his car to the pier a young man attempted to approach him but was stopped by the police and taken to headquarters. He said his name was Alfred

Hopkins, aged 19, of New York. A search revealed a letter which he said a man had given him to give to the ambassador together with a horoscope and writings of astrology and astronomy. The letter asked the ambassador to call upon the writer "to shoulder a gun in the service."

Announcement was made that the departure of the ship had been postponed for two hours or until 1 o'clock. No explanation was given but a shortage of coal was believed to have been the cause.

STILL NO WORD COMES FROM CONSTANTINOPLE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—Another inquiry was sent by the State Department today to Ambassador Elkus at Constantinople to develop why he had not been able to report about the marooned Americans detained in Asia Minor.

Since the break with Germany no word has been allowed to reach here either from Constantinople or Sofia. It developed today that the naval officer Chesler, loaded with a quarter of a million dollars worth of food supplies and contributed by Americans for Syrians and Armenians and the cruiser Des Moines with a cargo of medical supplies, both bound for Beirut, have been ordered held at Alexandria indefinitely by the Navy Department.

After the break with Germany officials here decided it was essential to keep the two vessels from entering a Turkish port until sufficient guarantees had been obtained that they would come to no harm.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—A nationwide campaign to raise $1,000,000 between now and February 22 in order to begin work at once on a beautiful and inspiring memorial to George Washington is now being carried on from the capital city by the George Washington Memorial Association. At the head of the organization is Mrs. Henry F. Dimock, known throughout the country for her patriotic and philanthropic work.

A magnificent site for the building has been donated to the association and is located at the corner of Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue overlooking the loveliest park in Washington, the Mall, which reaches from the Capitol to the White House. Already $250,000 has been donated to the $1,000,000 needed for starting the erection of the building.

In order that every patriotic American may have the opportunity to aid the project, contributions will be received ranging from 10 cents upward and in the archives of the association there will be kept the names and addresses of everyone, man, woman or child who gives a dime or more to the cause.

CAR LEAVES TRAIN

Slips Out and Rolls Down Bank; Delay Is Short.

The familiar story of the freight car which fell rapidly moving train without causing any delay comes to light again. The truth of the incident is vouched for by railroad men this time, only there was a delay of 10 minutes to recouple the cars and start out again.

Yesterday afternoon at 12:30 o'clock a westbound freight train running between Johnstown and Somerset stopped suddenly. It was found that a refrigerator car had rolled out of line and plunged down a bank.

The car toppled over an embankment onto a road. As soon as it left the rails the car caused the cars to stop. A brakeman went back to find the trouble, and seeing a break in the string of cars thought they had a fire. The rear engine pushed ahead and the train was hooked up again. As the freight was about to pull out the "brake" holding marks on the top of the embankment looked over and saw the car lying in the road. When it was derailed it became loose and being unbalanced fell over the hill.

The freight pulled on into the yards after but a few minutes delay. A tool train was sent out and the refrigerator car was put back on the rails.

The train was drawn by engine No. 4156 and was in charge of Conductor Barton. Engineer Albright was at the throttle.

HEARING IN RATE
CASE GOES OVER*Protest of Clearfield Operators Against Reduced Freight Tariff to Come Up in April.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 14.—The hearing set for tomorrow before the Public Service Commission meeting in this city in the case of the operators of the Clearfield region who are protesting against the reduced freight rates on coal eastbound from the Clearfield region has been postponed until April at the request of the Clearfield petitioners.

Last November the Pennsylvania railroad voluntarily filed revised tariffs extending the Westmoreland district rate to eastbound shipments from mines on its line and the Monongahela railroad to become effective January 1st. The Clearfield operators protested against the reduction and filed a petition with the Interstate Commerce Commission asking for a suspension of the rates as applied to interstate shipments. This petition was made to the Public Service Commission as having jurisdiction over interstate rates and February 15th set as the date for a hearing.

These actions have developed from the movement inaugurated by the Connellsville Coal Tariff Association for a more equitable adjustment of the rates on coal from the Connellsville region.

The Grim Reaper

JAMES C. COLLINS.
Word has been received here of the death of James C. Collins, a veteran of the Civil War, at his home on a farm about one mile southwest of Wellsville, Kan., after several weeks' illness. Mr. Collins was born near Connelville, a son of the late William and Eliza A. Collins and was one of a family of 14 brothers and sisters. He was twice married. December 27, 1851, he wedded Miss Elizabeth Vance. To this union, two children were born, Mrs. Mary Ellis of Phoenix, Arizona, and a son, William, who died in infancy. At the time the Union was calling for volunteers, Mr. Collins enlisted, serving with the 15th Pennsylvania cavalry under General Palmer for three years. At his discharge from the army he held the rank of corporal in Company D. Following the death of his first wife, and after the close of the war, Mr. Collins was married October 15, 1868, to Phoebe Woodward, the ceremony being performed in Connelville. Four children were born to this union, all of whom survive as follows: Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Rowland of Lane, Kan.; Mrs. Edna May Mohrman of Wellsville, Dr. David W. Collins of Arrington, Kan., and Roy Collins of Oklahoma City, Okla. There are also 11 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. Mr. Collins was a brother of Mrs. Clark Shaw of East Connelville, and L. L. Collins of Vanderbilt.

Mr. Collins and family located in Kansas, March 8, 1878, and for the first two months resided on the W. H. Collins farm, near Wellsville. They spent a part of a year in Wellsville, later moving to their present home. Mr. Collins united with the Methodist Church when 20 years old, being a member of that denomination at the time of his death. At the age of 21 years he became a member of the Odd Fellows lodge, and continued a member for more than 55 years. He served for many years as treasurer of the Wellsville lodge. He was also a member of the Masons and the G. A. R. and Workmen.

syrups and tonics, but nothing seemed to break her cold. I rubbed a little Vick's Vaporub up her nostrils and made her inhale a little of it, and she had instant relief in the head. ## QUIT MEAT IF YOUR KIDNEYS ACT BADLY

Take Tablespoonful of Salts
If Back Hurts or Kidneys Bother.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues sluggish and this waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to peek and peep during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in the joints, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act like new.
This famous salt is made from the acid of lemons and lemon juice, combined with sodium, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot harm; makes a delightful afternoon drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active. Adv.

Doctors Say Nuxated Iron Will Increase Strength of Delicate People 200% in Ten Days

In many instances—Persons have suffered untold agony for years due to nervous weakness, exhausted liver or kidney, general or acute other ailments when their real trouble was lack of iron in the blood.—How to tell.

New York, N. Y.—In a recent discourse Dr. E. S. Salter, a Specialist who has studied widely both in this country and Europe said: "If you were to make an actual blood test, on all people who are ill you would probably be greatly astonished at the exceedingly large number who lack iron and who are ill for no other reason than the lack of iron. The moment iron is supplied, all their multitude of dangerous symptoms disappear. Without iron the blood at once loses the power to change food into living tissue and therefore nothing you eat does you any good; you don't get the strength out of it. Your food merely passes through your system like corn through a mill with the rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind. As a result of this continuous blood and nerve starvation, people become generally weakened, nervous and all run down and frequently develop all sorts of conditions. One is too thin; another is burdened with unhealthy fat;
some are so weak they can hardly walk;
some think they have dyspepsia, kidney or liver trouble; some can't sleep at night, others are sleepy and tired all day; some fancy and irritable; some skinny and bloodless, but all lack physical power and endurance. In such cases it is worse than useless to take stimulating medicines or narcotic drugs, which only whip up your flagging vital powers for the moment, maybe at the expense of your life later on. No matter what anyone tells you, if you are not strong and well you owe it to yourself to make the following test. See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary nuxated iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. I have seen dozens of nervous run down people who were ailing all the time (double) and even triple their strength and endurance and entirely get rid of their symptoms of dyspepsia, liver and other troubles in from ten to fourteen days time simply by taking iron in the proper form, and this after they had in some cases been doctoring for months without obtaining any benefit. You can tell as you please about all the wonders wrought by new remedies, but when you come down to hard facts there is nothing like good old iron to put color in your cheeks and good, sound, healthy flesh on your bones. It is also a great nerve and stomach-strengthening and the best blood builder in the world. The only trouble was that the old forms of inorganic iron like tincture of iron iron acetate, etc., often ruined people's teeth, upset their stomachs and were not assimilated and for these reasons they frequently did more harm than good. But with the discovery of the newest form of organic iron all this has been overcome. Nuxated iron for example, is pleasant to take, does not injure the teeth and is almost immeasurably beneficial.

NOTE.—The manufacturers of Nuxated iron have such unbounded confidence in its potency that they authorize the announcement that they will forfeit $1000 to any charitable institution if they cannot take any man or woman under sixty who lacks iron and increase their strength 20 per cent or over in four weeks' time, provided they have no serious organic trouble. Also they will refund your money in any case in which Nuxated iron does not at least double your strength in ten days' time. It is dispensed in this city by A. A. Clark and all other druggists.—Adv.

Lowell, Mass.—"For the last three

CURFEW AND PLAYGROUNDS.

If the playground movement needed another or better argument in its support, the recognition by the Women's Culture Club and members of the city council of the necessity of a curfew ordinance has supplied it.

That there are far too many children on the streets until late hours, and without benefit or profit to themselves, is not denied. Neither is it disputed that parents should keep them at home. But the oft repeated statement that the city will not solve the problem of playing children without attempting to take the place of the street as an evening gathering place.

It is the misfortune of some children to have homes in which forms of recreation suited to their years and tastes cannot be supplied. It is the misfortune of other children to have parents who think it is a waste of means and time to provide their children with facilities for amusement and play in the home. It is the misfortune of still other children to have homes in which there is such scrupulous exactness and order that children pastimes can be indulged only under burdensome and tiresome restraint.

For children from these three classes of homes there must be some place where they can get free vent to the animal in their nature. In their city and all others, unprovided with a playground system, the streets furnish the only place where children can gather to secure that recreation which is so essential to their growth and development. In the unrestricted, unregulated and precarious use of the streets are many temptations and dangers which most parents recognize and which they would be glad to have removed.

A curfew ordinance would have the effect of keeping the children off the streets, but no matter how effectively it might be enforced, it will not provide a substitute for the attractions which draw children to the streets. Children must have their sports and recreations. A curfew law will not wholly deprive them of the opportunity, but it will place some restriction upon it and, moreover, will offer the enticement of indulgence in violation of the law. To the extent that such indulgence is permitted to go unpunished there will be a growing disrespect for law. This, after all, may be an evil of greater consequence than would follow from the absence of a curfew regulation, great as the need of it may be.

It is doubtful if we can expect a curfew law to accomplish for the children all that some persons may expect of it. We are so prone to allow our zeal for a new idea or thing to peter out after a few weeks or months of more or less enthusiastic interest, that we have no assurance that the curfew would not suffer a like fate as other things attempted in the line of civic reform or betterments. Unless the curfew ordinance is enforced consistently and without favor its enactment will avail little in the regulation of the use of the streets by children.

The happier solution of the problem would seem to lie through a combination of the playground system and the curfew, but it might be found that the playgrounds, well equipped and properly conducted, would themselves serve all the purposes of a curfew.

AMENDING THE CLARK ACT.

Among the amendments to the third-class city law, or Clark Act, is one which extends to any officer or employee of a city the same provisions relating to bribery as now apply only to members of council.

As the law now reads, "Any member of council who shall solicit, demand or receive, or consent to receive, directly or indirectly, for himself or for another, any money, office, appointment, employment, testimonial, reward, thing of value, or promise thereof for his vote or official influence, or withholding the same, shall be held guilty of bribery, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding ten thousand dollars, and imprisoned by separate and solitary confinement at labor not exceeding five years, and shall be forever incapable of holding any place of profit or trust in the Commonwealth."

The proposed amendment makes all city officers and employees, whether elective or appointive, subject to the same penalties for bribery as are now prescribed for councilmen. No change is made in that section of the law which applies equal penalties to persons bribing or offering to bribe a member of council or other officer or employee.

That such an amendment to the Clark Act was necessary directs attention to but one of the many deficiencies and inequities of the law. The carelessness and haste with which the law was drafted is shown by the section which made councilmen only subject to penalties for accepting bribes, and permitted all other officers and employees to enjoy immunity from punishment for this offense. Passage of the amendment will remedy this very glaring defect, and tend to give the law more effectiveness as a third-class city code in the important particular of providing rather heavy penalties for

TO THE EMPLOYERS OF HUNGARIAN MINERS

By Martin Himier, Editor Hungarian Miners Journal.

Supplementing the appeal made to individual miners resident in the United States, who are subjects of Austria and Hungary, to maintain a just and proper attitude toward America, its institutions and their employers, in the present disturbed state of our relations with Germany, Martin Himier, editor of the Hungarian Miners Journal has addressed this appeal to employers of his fellow countrymen:

"Those Hungarians who already became American citizens understand very well their duty. It would be an offense against them if we would undertake to remind them of their allegiance.

"On the other hand, those Hungarians who are not yet citizens feel themselves obliged to those United States since they succeeded in finding here an honest living by peaceful occupations just for what they came over from Europe. In the name of these Hungarian miners, we ask employers to continue to keep them in their good will and confidence no matter what the future may have in store for this country. As in the past, Hungarian miners will be worthy of their confidence in the future.

"Here we wish to remind the employers of Hungarian miners and our fellow American workmen of the history of the last two years. We wish to bring to their memory the fact that nobody could raise any objection whatever against the behavior of Hungarian workmen, especially that of miners though undoubtedly many misdeeds and wrongs were committed by foreigners.

"To secure an honest living for themselves and their families, was the aim of Hungarian miners that prompted them to come over. Since their arrival they succeeded in winning the esteem and love of their employers and the sympathy of American citizens, as well. And they earnestly desire to keep that sympathy further on.

"There never existed and never could exist any antipathy between America and the Hungarian people. After 1848 citizens of the United States gave a hearty welcome to Louis Kosuth, the great Hungarian liberator. In the past the American people rendered valuable moral help to the Hungarians in their fight for liberty. Hungarians did not change because of the crisis that has broken out without their intention between America and the Central Powers. Hungarian miners will continue to work for their employers as before whatever the future may hold in store for this country as in the past and avoid everything that might arouse the antipathy of the American people.

"It is our great hope that employers and American fellow-workmen will appreciate the difficult situation the Hungarian miners are in; they will not allow that Hungarian miners should suffer under the crisis between their two countries and they will continue to keep them in their good will, esteem and love."

TO REGULATE THE DOG EVIL.

In line with a suggestion made by The Courier some days ago, that effective measures must be taken to eliminate the dog evil before any success can be hoped for in a revival of the sheep-raising industry, the Fayette Park Club at its recent meeting took an important step in that direction.

A committee was appointed to prepare a petition to the court asking that the constables and assessors in the several townships of the county be instructed to strictly enforce the existing dog law. The same committee was directed to confer with the county commissioners with a view to securing their cooperation in the movement.

These measures will no doubt tend to promote greater effectiveness in so far as getting rid of unlicensed dogs is concerned, but to solve the problem with such completeness as will afford ample protection from the present menace from this source, will require that other things be done.

One of the things it seems desirable and necessary to do is to bring about a further reduction in the number of dogs than the killing of those unlicensed and unclaimed will alone bring about. This could be effected to a considerable degree through the imposition of a largely increased tax which would tend to prevent the unrestricted rearing of mongrel breeds. In addition there should be more exacting regulations governing the care and control of licensed dogs so as to limit the range of their activities. Owners of other live stock, which is destructive only of growing crops, do not allow it to roam at will over a neighborhood. With the same regard for their neighbors' rights they should not allow dogs, with sheep-killing instincts or habits, to have unrestricted freedom. Farmers are obliged under the law to keep a grain-detracting steer at home. They should have no greater privilege with a sheep-killing dog.

BY ANOTHER NAME.

The bugaboo of "subsidy" which has always been successfully used by the Democrats in Congress in defeating Republican attempts to build up the merchant marine of the United States by means of mail subsidies, has been forgotten by the Democratic chairman of the Senate post office committee. He has introduced an amendment to the post office appropriation bill proposing that the government pay $10 a mile for ocean mail service on American-built steamers, having a displacement of 35,000 tons or over and developing a speed of 30 knots an hour.

That method of compensation would yield the vessel owners $30,000 for each trans-Atlantic trip—a pure subsidy in everything but name.

The State Department of Labor and industry is very much disposed to suspend diplomatic relations with the president violators of the child labor and female employment laws. Some passports may be handed out almost any time.

The Veteran coke plant, like other veterans in the service, has closed its career of usefulness.

Poultry experts urge the early hatching of chickens. Perhaps they forget that setting hens is like eating hares. You must first catch your egg as well as your hare, and catching eggs there days is almost as sure a sport as catching hares.

The second tea party at city hall seemed to be less a social affair than the first.

playgrounds and curfew going arm in arm, would be much better than to be without playgrounds and have the children go home hand in hand with a policeman.

It would be an oddity to find an Odd Fellow who is not a patriot.

The suggestion to use the section of West Fairview avenue alongside the Maceboon building as a site for a new city hall will no doubt meet with general approval providing council can figure out a generally favored plan for meeting the expense.

THE ALK.

I saw a young man dead, on January 10, he never will be heard by his old boss again. When first he started in at Watson's beerware store, he seemed like one who'd win the laurels by the score. For he had quick wit and a keen eye, and a slugging back he waved an active limb, and left a trail of smoke. All this was well, but after some weeks, his head began to swell, as young heads swell, at times. He thought the beerware store would close if he should quit; the Old Man was a hero, and he alone was it. Now, when a young man feels that he's the prop of trade, that all the plunkers and wheels by his address are used, he's walking on a fall, his feet will hit the dump; and when too late he'll have that he was such a chump.

THE CONVERTIBLE TOP.

The convertible top is a pleasing attachment to a second-hand touring car which enables it to depreciate as fast as the latest as the latest. Until the convertible top was invented the touring car did not depreciate very much during the cold winter months, as it was always in the barn and allowed to collect battery troubles and radiator leaks. After the owner of an aged touring car which could not make anything out of winter, it started from the top of the hill had fed it high priced gasoline all summer and watched it depreciate. From the radiator cap to the extra tire on the rim, he would lay it away in December with a sigh of relief and try to think of something else. This is no longer possible, however, owing to the unspringing of the convertible top with its door attachment.

The object of the convertible top is to prevent people in the back seat from being slowly transformed into artificial mummies. When properly adjusted, the master plumber whose time is worth just as much when he is lighting his pipe as at any other period, it can be made to do anything.

IT DOESN'T FIT ANY ONE ON THE END OF THE CAN HAVE IT FOR THE FIRST TIME PUTTY AND GUM PLASTER, AND WEATHER STAYS.

Some of the first convertible tops were an architectural disappointment, as they were full of a split and a split and allowed a large amount of zero weather to creep in and ossify the owner's family. They also had a soul-crushing radiator which sounded like a clog dance in a tin shop.

The new convertible tops, however, fit like a pre-shrunk union suit and look as much at home as a chronic backslider at camp meeting. A touring car with one of these tops and a hot-air register in the lounge is more comfortable than a new bungalow with a weak-kneed hunting plant, which contracts the asthma every time it soaks a cold wave coming. The only people who do not feel the need of a convertible top are those who live in a climate where the front wheel is as reliable as the sun except the perpetual political candidate.

An Important Announcement
 In the Shoe Department

The Union Supply Company announces the arrival of complete lines of early Spring shoes. Many of our stores have complete stocks; others have a part of their Spring stock, with additional shipments coming in daily—enough on hand to take care of the wants of everybody. It would be hard to describe the many different styles and the many different colors, and the many different prices, of novelties for women and misses, but we want to make the statement that we can offer you just as great variety, just as popular lines, and lower prices than any exclusive shoe store. In men's and boys' dress shoes we have extensive lines, numerous styles, popular prices, but what we want to call your attention to particularly and what we are interested in very greatly, is our good wearing, well-established working shoes for men. In all the different lines of shoes there have been wonderful advances in price, and accordingly to the best authorities there are going to be still further advances. Yet, notwithstanding, we believe our prices are very reasonable. Many of these goods were purchased before the big advance went into effect and we are giving our customer the benefit of it; others show some slight advance over last season, but the advances are much less than what other dealers are selling the same class of goods at.

We have large stocks of the Hi-press White Rubber Shoes, both in the medium and high top styles. The demand for this shoe is simply wonderful. It is created simply by the extraordinary wearing qualities of the goods. They are popular with the miners, and popular with outside men. Again, what makes them popular, in our judgment, is their good wearing qualities. Our stocks of them are very complete—they are a leader in every one of our shoe departments.

COMPETITION FOR MEN AFTER WAR

Immigration Commissioner Convinced That Industrial Nations Will bid Against Each Other for Labor.

In an address in Pittsburgh recently Dr. Frederick C. Howe, Immigration Commissioner of the United States, discussed industrial conditions throughout the world following the close of the European war. On the question of labor supply he said in part:

"One thing I am quite satisfied: there is going to be a big competition for men all over the world. Canada has lost heavily, and she will try to draw people from the United States, as well as from England. Mexico will probably be at peace, and, while she is not inviting immigration, she will try to break up the big monopolistic land holdings in that country, and provide land for settlers.

"The same is true of Australia. Germany and France will do all they can to keep the people at home, because of the shortage of able-bodied men. It may be, and it is most likely, that European countries will do all they can, even through legislation, to keep their own men at home for the reconstruction period.

"On the other hand, I expect to see thousands of able-bodied foreigners leave the United States for Europe, when peace comes. The steamship companies report that 1,000,000 such are already planning to return. Instead of a surplus of labor there is going to be a universal shortage. Should Europe and Canada adopt comprehensive land policies it is quite possible that the United States will be confronted with a permanent shortage of labor."

IS NOW READY NEW B. & O. PIER

New Coal Handling Structure at Curtis Bay Costing $1,500,000 Has Been Put Through Final Tests.

Final test of the machinery and equipment of the new $1,500,000 coal pier of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad at Curtis Bay has been made and the pier is now ready for operation.

The pier, which is operated by gravity, is the first of its kind ever constructed, and embodies the latest methods for handling coal, including the mammoth dip belt of half a mile, it is nearly three-quarters of a mile in length, the steel structure being 1,000 feet long. The pier rises at a steep grade from the yard, and then slopes to the water front until it is just 15 feet above mean low water mark. Several hundred feet from the apex of the rise is a tawling shed 400 feet long and 30 feet wide, which will be used in thawing frozen and water-soaked coal before it is loaded upon vessels.

From the apex of the pier the cars run by gravity to the waterfront end. Engines push the loaded cars to the apex. The cars first run to the thawing shed, thence to the dumpers, where the cars are overturned and the coal placed on conveyors that take it to the boats. The pier is able to dock vessels of the largest type and will have a yearly capacity of 10,000,000 tons of coal. The coal is transferred from the conveyors to the ships' holds by belts.

A power house having boilers totaling 1,000 horsepower has been completed to supply heat for the thawing shed and power for operating machinery. Practically all of the pier machinery will be operated by electricity.

Miles of tracks are being laid to increase the capacity of the coal yards. Room for 4,000 cars will be provided.

PIRATES' MANY FIRST BASEMEN

Pittsburgh Has Had Nineteen In Past Twelve Years.

IT'S UP TO WAGNER IN 1917

Veteran Shortstop Will Be Transferred to Initial Back by Manager Callahan. Buccaneers Haven't Had Good Man Since Days of "Kitty" Bransfield.

The recent appointment of William E. ("Kitty") Bransfield to the National league staff recalls his days as a member of the Pittsburgh infield and the twelve years of search, not yet ended, by Barney Dreyfuss, Paul Clarke and more recently Jimmy Callahan for a successor. No club in recent major league history has had the difficult time filling the shoes of a player that Pittsburgh managers have had in their attempts to get a real successor to Bransfield.

When "Kitty" was a member of the Pirates he played first base in a way that made the critics pronounce him one of the best to show in many years. After Dreyfuss traded him to Philadelphia for Del Howard and Paul Krueger, Bransfield continued to play the position as only experts can. When the trade was made it was believed that Howard was to develop into one of the game's greatest stars, but he fell short. This was indeed a sorry trade for Dreyfuss. In the twelve seasons since Bransfield bade farewell to Pittsburgh fans no fewer than nineteen players have been used as first basemen by the Pirates.

Next season Houtz Wagner is to get the steady berth, according to reports. Houtz is about through as a shortstop, but he has plenty of baseball talent and can do as well as many of the men who have been tried out since Bransfield started at the position. The latter was a member of the Pirates for four seasons, and since his departure only one player, Jack Miller, has been able to hold the place through two seasons.

Del Howard, who figured in the trade which sent Bransfield to Philadelphia, was the first of the long line of successors. He started the 1905 season as first baseman for the Pirates, but before the season was over two other players, Homer Hillbrand and Bill Clancy, got a chance to show how well they could play the position. That all three failed to show the necessary skill is indicated by the fact that Joe Newton was the regular first baseman in 1905. Newton held the place all season, something that did not happen in any other season between 1904 and 1912. Two, three or four were on the job in the six other seasons between Bransfield's departure and the shifting of Jack Miller from second base to first in 1912.

Newton was again on hand in 1907, but he did not do all the work. Al Stork and Harry Swanson also had opportunities in that year to prove themselves first basemen of major-league caliber. In 1908 Swanson and Stork made up half of the field which tried out for the position of regular. Warren Gill and Jimmy Kane were also tried out, but failed to make good. The 1909 season marked the advent of Bill Abstein into the fast-growing ranks of Pittsburgh first basemen, and Bill was fortunate in coming in during a pennant winning year, sharing in the world's series money in October. He played most of the season at first base, Houtz filling in for about twenty games. Though he helped to make a pennant winner, Abstein did not last until the next season. When the season got under way Jack Miller occupied first base for the Pirates, but he had some real opposition. Ham Wyatt and Bud Shupe were others to try their hand at the position, and all seemed to tattle in the shoes which Bransfield had left. By this time Barney Dreyfuss had concluded that "Kitty" was worth more to Pittsburgh than he ever before had dreamed.

Feed Hunter got the call in 1911, but he also failed to answer it. He played almost half the season at the position, and Bill McKeehan did the honors during the greater part of the campaign. Both were among the missing when another season rolled around, mute evidence that they had failed.

About this time Fred Clarke hit upon the scheme of making a first baseman of Jack Miller, who had broken into the Pittsburgh lineup as a second baseman. Miller lasted longer at the position than has any other of the numerous candidates. It was the regular during two full seasons, 1912 and 1913. Then came the trade which sent Miller to St. Louis and took Ed Koncinski to Pittsburgh to swell the ranks of those who tried to fill Bransfield's shoes. Koncinski fielded well and hit poorly, but might have lasted another year but for a big offer to join the Pittsburgh Reds after he had played one entire season with the Pirates. Then came Doc Johnston, who held the position through 1915, but showed up so much in 1916 that Wagner and Bill Clancy were tried out.

Now comes Houtz back again to be the regular. He may not shake in Bransfield's shoes, but time has exacted its toll in recent years, and the chances are that Houtz will rattle as so many others have done. Some day Pittsburgh may find a player to fill those shoes.

FORMER PUG HOLDS BIG JOB.

John Herget, Known as Young Mitchell, Now Handling Millions.

When the city of San Francisco desires to spend a couple of million dollars for various purposes John Herget, former middleweight champion of the Pacific coast and at one time virtually champion middleweight of the world, passes on the business.

The sports world of the late eighties and early nineties knew John Herget as Young Mitchell. He is now rated as a wealthy man and high in the politics of San Francisco. Herget served as supervisor for one term. His official title at present is inspector of supplies for the board of supervisors of San Francisco county.

To this man who taught himself in a class with Jack Dempsey is given the job of seeing that San Francisco does not get cheated when public money is appropriated. Agents of big mercantile and supply houses court John Herget. His word is powerful with the supervisors, whose confidential agent he is.

Present day fame may not realize that Herget is regarded by some of the old timers as the greatest all around big man of the many which California has contributed.

One of Young Mitchell's greatest battles was with Peter Holup, the Australian middleweight. This contest occurred near Melbourne in the open. It required three hours to finish the forty round draw.

San Francisco has not been unkind to her past champions, and not a few of them occupy important and responsible public places. John Herget is married, and settled down these many years. Business affairs occupy most of his time, and the keen eye which marked his great play now is now devoted to safeguarding the millions which a great city spends each year.

HOWARD BERRY WANTS TO DEMONSTRATE HE IS COUNTRY'S GREAT ATHLETE

HOWARD BERRY, the great all around athlete of the University of Pennsylvania, says that he intends to win his letter in every branch of athletics before he closes his college days. So far Berry has a number to his credit, with more in sight. In addition to making good in track and field of sports, Berry was Penn's best football player last fall. Last summer Berry won the title of intercollegiate all-around champion, and many experts believe in his greatness of all collegiate champions. He is more than anxious to meet Alva Brundage, who won the national all-around title at Newark last year, for the title of the great all around athlete in this country. Photo shows Berry and his smile.

and won three games for them at the far end of the campaign, attributes his success to the coaching he received from Tyrus Raymond Cobb. It seems that Cobb took a fancy to Ehmk as soon as the latter reported to Hughey Jennings. Whenever Ehmk appeared in the box Cobb took pains to tell him about the weak points of each batsman.

Tyrus knew when to pitch to the man at the plate a curve, a floater or a speeder. Ehmk followed Cobb's instructions to the letter, and his pitching helped the Tigers to fight the Red Sox in the final series. Ehmk pitched the Syracuse team into the championship of the New York State league last season. He won thirty-one games and lost seven. Cobb and Jennings predict that the youngster will be one of the American league's best bowlers during the coming pennant race.

Facts Versus Fallacies

FACT is a real state of things. FALLACY is an apparently genuine but really illogical statement or argument.

MORE than 4000 years ago the Emperor of China, by edict, prohibited the drinking of alcohol in his kingdom. And it is an indisputable FACT that the Chinese, like the Mohammedans, Turks and a few other virtually effete nations under Prohibition law, have existed in a sort of dead-alive and non-progressive way.

SEVENTY years ago the first Prohibition law in this country was adopted in Maine, and 36 years ago in Kansas. Yet Police Reports concede much more drunkenness in the cities of those two States than in the cities of nearly all States in which the sale of liquors is licensed and regulated by law. Census Reports, too, bear witness that there are less church members in the States of Maine and Kansas than in nearly all States of the Union, in proportion to population.

IN OTHER words, although there is evil attendant on the misuse of alcoholic beverages, just as there is ill result from abuse in all pursuits of life, it is a FACT that Prohibition law does not succeed in stopping nor lessening the consumption of liquors (as statistics verify), but to the contrary increases lawlessness by thousands of citizens who resent and defy a "dry" law as unjust, and who determinedly exercise what they regard as their right to drink, regardless of law.

A RECENT editorial in the "St. Louis Post-Dispatch" should impress itself on the minds of all Prohibitionists of today who, in their illusory and FALLACIOUS course grope blindly after "dry" folly. This editorial pungently observes:

"THE verdict of science on alcohol has not yet been rendered. But the verdict of humanity as to its use in moderation is still to the effect that such use is not necessarily harmful. There are doubtless, as with tobacco and other stimulants, persons whose temperaments and idiosyncrasies make even the moderate use of alcohol injurious. They should avoid it, but they should not expect to make their weakness an excuse for the creation of legislation which, as Mr. Taft (former President) says, demoralizes law because it cannot be enforced."

PROHIBITIONISTS make the mistake of going to extremes—in seeking the unattainable. The FALLACIES they preached throughout ages, have blinded for a time misinformed and unthinking people. But FACTS show that education alone can prove efficacious in making derelicts better in the use of liquors—or in the use of any other product.

CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

"AUTHOR OF 'THE CHALLENGE OF COURAGE' AND 'THE ISLAND OF REGENERATION,' ETC., AND

CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY JR.

CIVIL ENGINEER.

COPYRIGHT BY FLEMING H. NEVELL COMPANY

In his excitement he left the shelter of the hut and stalked through the mist toward the edge of the mesa, where he could have a better and clearer view. In spite of Rodney's remonstrances, even though becked by his outstretched arm, the woman followed. Presently all three, indifferent to the heat of the sun and the assault of the wind, stood watching the battle on the plain. It was about half past five, fortunately, or else they could scarcely have sustained the attack of that wind and rain, nor could they have seen at all, even with that glass.

Standing down at the dam after a moment, Helen Illingworth took the glass from Rodney. She focused it rapidly and looked steadily through it. She knew what she was seeking as she stood steadily herself with splendid nerve and resolution and swept the length of the dam back and forth.

"I don't see him. He's not there," she said at last, handing the glass back to its owner.

"If he were there, you'd see him all right," said Waters enthusiastically, "because he'd be in the thick of the fight."

"I doubt if you can recognize anyone, even through the glass, at such a distance," said Rodney, after he had focused it and taken a look himself. "Yet if he were there, he certainly would be in the thick of it. He's that kind. You look, Dick."

"I can't see him," said Waters in turn. "But what a fight they are making to save that dam."

"Will it hold?" asked the woman. "Impossible," said Rodney.

"I give it one hour," said Waters, handing over the glass.

"Not more than that," assented the other, after another look. "See for yourself, Miss Illingworth."

From where they stood, high up on the roof of the world, they were spectators of a great battle, witnesses of a terrible contest, in which herculean effort, desperate courage, human will, all exerted to the limit, finally degenerated into blind, mechanical habit of continuous and frenzied endeavor.

The spirit of reckless continuance had not then been moved from the impossible. As men in a battle charge on over with wounds enough to kill them in ordinary circumstances, as soldiers at Winchester, though shot in the heart, actually struggled after Sheridan until they fell, or even as a common horse may go on until he drops dead, so these men gave their all in unmitigated desperation.

"They'd better get off that dam," said Rodney. "When it once falls it'll go with a rush and then it'll be too late."

"Look at them. They're not going to get off," said Waters. "They're going down with it. Pshaw, God bless 'em!" he shouted, throwing up his arms in exultation over manhood and courage and determination.

"Perhaps you had better go back, Miss Illingworth," said Rodney, thinking of the horse she might witness at any moment.

"I wouldn't be elsewhere for the world," said the brave girl, white but with firm lips—she was made of the same stuff as the fighting men. It seemed—even if he were there, fighting that great battle, I should wait to see the end."

"We're not the only people in this wilderness. Look yonder!" cried Waters.

He pointed down through the canopy of rain toward the lower edge of the mesa. There, far below him, were three sudden figures. The water in the lake had needed the slope of the hill, but at that side it was lapsing into the lake of the cliff. The trail had, of course, been covered, and there was no way of progress except by taking advantage of the broken rock at the foot of the cliff, which here and there still stood above the water. It was a place where men could only pass by carefully choosing their way and calculating the distance of the next point toward which to leap. These three were moving like snail-shells, splashing through the water, hurrying themselves from rock to rock, falling against the wall, clutching a tree or shrub, slipping into the lake, saving themselves from drowning apparently only by the caprice of a complacent current, which they were trying to the utmost limit.

One man carried a miner's pick, a spade and a surveyor's range pole, the other another spade and two long stakes which looked like the separate legs of a tripod. The bareheaded man, who had thrown his rubber coat down to the reddish-yellow water, carried a good steel oilskin bag. He was the most hurried of the three. He ran some distance in front of the others. They dotted here and there, he sought to protect the bag. When he slipped or seemed about to fall, he always instinctively flung himself away from the rock with outstretched arm.

"What the three men would be at of course no one knew. It was obvious that they were in a desperate hurry and that the thing in the bag must be carefully guarded. Naturally the watchers centered the men with the dam builders. They were dressed as the men engaged in such labor would be dressed. The pick, the spade and the pole and stakes bore out that conclusion.

"What's in the bag?" asked the woman.

"He carries it as though it might be gold or diamonds," said Waters. Rodney shook his head. Suddenly he divined the reason for the extreme care with which the bag was carried. The men were immediately below the three watchers now. He could make out pretty well what was the size and shape of the objects that bulged the waterproof bag.

"I have it," he shouted. "Dynamite!"

"What for?"

Rodney shook his head again. The man in front was in plain view. He was a tall figure, his face was heavily bearded. From the angle at which they saw him it was impossible to recognize him, nor was he in his frantic progress assuming the usual attitude and bearing of a man in ordinary conditions which sometimes betray him to those who know him well. Nor could Helen Illingworth, with her trembling hands focus the glass, which she took from Rodney before the struggling adventurers had passed; and yet there was something in the figure below that made her heart beat faster.

She pressed her hand to the wet garments over her heart and stared. Suddenly Rodney raised his voice and shouted at the very top of it. Waters joined in, and even Helen Illingworth found herself screaming. The three men below were not more than five or six hundred feet away, but evidently they could not possibly hear in that tumult of nature. No voices would carry through any such rain and wind. They were too intent on their paths and on what they had to do to look upward. They rounded the shoulder of the mesa and disappeared in the pines at its feet.

The three on the top looked at each other.

"The dam still holds," said Rodney, quite unsuspecting what was in the woman's heart.

Even as he spoke, Helen Illingworth turned away. She ran heavily in her sudden garments along the broken mesa top past the house to the upper edge. There below her were the three men just emerging from the fringe of trees, rounding the end of the mesa, they had at last struck firmer ground. Helen Illingworth could see them through the pines on the old trail. The going was had enough, but it was nothing compared to what they had passed over and presently they burst out of the woods and ran along the greasy, well-trodden hogback that divided the valley from the mesa.

The woman had an idea what was toward; what was their purpose. She could only stare and stare at the rapidly moving far-off figure indolently in the lead, and the others following after. There Waters joined her.

"Rodney sent me to look after you; he feels that he must stay back and watch the dam for his paper."

"Look," said Helen, pointing far down. The men halted at the very narrowest part of the hogback. They were clustered together. The bag lay on the ground behind them. One man went over it, evidently opening it. Another man swung the shovel vigorously, the third grabbed the pick. Waters had been too far removed from engineering even, yet to figure out what was toward. They could only watch and wonder.

CHAPTER XX.

The Victims.

Mende knew that they were fighting a losing battle. Every one of the higher grade men knew it also. The spillway was entirely inadequate, but it suddenly flashed into his mind, with that consciousness of the hopelessness of the struggle, that perhaps there was another way to discharge the flood. The same idea might have come to any other of the more intelligent of the men from Vandewater down if they had taken a moment for reflection. If they had not been so frantically, so fearfully engrossed in their present pangs but gallant efforts to save the dam, they certainly would have remembered. That the possibility came to Mende rather than to any of the others was perhaps due to the fact that he had noted the situation later and had studied the conditions more recently. Those solitary rambles of his, those careful inspections of the terrain of the valley, had been made long after the original surveys and the results of his observations were still fresh in his mind.

The water was rising so rapidly that the cloudburst and he saw that the inevitable failure was clearly that he did not dare to waste time to look up Vandewater, tell him his plan, and get his permission. Every second was of the utmost value. When the thought came, he acted instantly. He was in the position of the commander of a small force, to whom is suddenly presented the bare possibility of wresting victory from defeat by some splendidly daring and unforeseen undertaking. And he was the man to seize such a possibility and make the most of it.

He had endeavored himself to some of the men and the respect in which he was held by Vandewater was shared by the others. When he called, two of the most capable of the workmen, a big, burly Irishman and a stout little Italian, to follow him, they did it without a moment's hesitation.

"The rest of you keep on here," he shouted as he left the gang. "Murphy and Funnaro, come with me. Keep it up; I think I know a way to help." He yelled back through the rain as he scrambled off the dam up the rocks to the spillway. It was not his fault that they could not hear and could not understand.

The water was rushing through the spillway about knee deep, and the three men plunging forward through it had difficulty in keeping their footing on the broken, rocky bottom. When they reached the other side Mende shouted above the storm:

"Murphy, bring your pick and shovel; take that iron range pole, too. Here, Funnaro, you take your shovel and these."

As he spoke he ran into the office shack and wrecked a transit tripod, ruthlessly separating the legs from one another by main force and pitching two of them into the little Italian's outstretched arms.

Without a question, both men complied with his directions. In a huge crevice, almost a small cave, in the spur of the mesa which overhung the east end of the dam the explosives were stored. The dynamite was kept in oilskin bags, the detonating caps in waterproof boxes. There were sixteen sticks or cartridges in each bag. Each stick was an inch and a half in diameter and eight inches long. One bagful should be ample. Indeed, if that did not do the work, the attempt would fail.

The men waited while Mende selected a bag of dynamite, a box of detonators, and a package of fuses. It was a cardinal rule that dynamite cartridges and detonating caps should never be carried by the same person, because the combination so greatly increased the risk of premature explosion.

The fulminate of mercury in the detonators was very volatile, highly explosive and immensely destructive, considering its size. One such cap could blow off a man's head, or even his hand, and in its explosion might ignite the dynamite. Hence the separation when being carried.

Mende decided to take that risk. He knew how perilous was the undertaking, how liable he was in his hurry to fall against the rocks, slippery and half submerged in that pouring rain. He knew what the consequences of such a fall would be. He would center all risks in his pocket. He thrust the box of detonators in his pocket, the package of fuses inside his flannel shirt and carried the dynamite bag in his hand. He would need his free hand to protect himself, so all the tools were carried by the other men.

The little Italian shook his head as he noted these preparations. He had hoped to be one of the explosive force those whose duty it was to do the blasting. In his practical way he knew a great deal about the properties and possibilities of usefulness of the dynamite. Mende's purpose was obvious even to Murphy, who was only a laborer, though where he proposed to work neither man had any idea at all.

"Dynamite no work in this weather," said Funnaro impressively.

"Probably not," answered Mende, hurrying his preparations, "but it's our only chance."

"Give me ze caps," urged the Italian gallantly.

"No, I'll take both."

"It's dangerous."

"Yes, but come on."

Mende, wasting no more words sprang at what was left of the trail and the two men gallantly followed him. The hogback at which he was aiming was perhaps a little more than two miles from the dam. On the ordinary trail and prepared for the run he could have managed it in fifteen minutes; as it was, they made it in thirty. The extreme possibility of the life of the dam seemed to Mende much greater. He went in the lead and by his direction the others kept some distance behind him.

"If I fall and explode this dynamite, there's no need of all three of us being blown up," he had said, and it was no reflection on their courage that they complied with his direction.

Indeed a stern command was necessary to keep the two men back. They had caught something of the gallant spirit of the engineer, and the big Irishman and the little Italian were as eager as he. Helped by a few heavy warms as they ran, they had both of them learned what he would be at. They both realized that they were the foreign hope, that if they could not save the dam nobody and nothing could. And there was a trace of the age-long rivalry between the Celt and the Roman. The son of the legionary and the son of the barbarian who had tought together in the dawn of history with each other, then. Again and again Mende had to order them back. He was keenly sensible of his danger. He knew that if he fell, if the dynamite struck the ground violently, it might explode. He knew that the unstable fulminate of mercury in the detonators might go off at any time, perhaps that was the greater danger, but he never checked his pace or hesitated in a leap or sought an easy way for a second. His soul was rising and his heart was beating as they had never risen or beaten in his life. And the hearts of his men beat with his own.

His Soul Was Rising and His Heart Was Beating.

He knew, of course, if the dam went out the railroad, the bridge, the town, the citizens, the woman and children, and everything that everybody would go. If he could save them, his life might be set off against the loss of the International. But whether that were true or not, whatever the consequences to him, he was bound to save them. The weight of every man, the weight of every woman, the weight of every child in the valley, the weight of all the business enterprises of the town, the weight of the great vindictive steel, the weight of the huge dam itself, was on his shoulders as he ran. He carried the burden lightly, as Atlas might have borne the world with laughter. For, despite his determination and haste, he had in his heart the great joy that comes when men attempt grandly and dare greatly for their common men. If he could only by and by see his hopes justified by success, his happiness would be complete.

And there were thoughts personal as well as general. If he died, whether successful or not, men would tell about his endeavor. She would hear. It came to him afterward, when he learned how she had looked down upon him as he ran, that he had somehow felt her presence, not a presence compelling him to look up, but a presence driving him on. He lost his hat, he tore off his long coat and threw it aside as he plunged on with his precious bag in his hand. He did not dare to look at his watch, he did not stop for anything, but it seemed that he must have spent hours in that mad scramble over the water-covered rocks. He heaved a deep breath of relief when he rounded the mesa and struck the trail. But as was the going, it was nothing to what they had passed over.

Presently he broke out into the open slope and there before him was the rounded curve of the hogback, to gain which he had risked so much. Were they in time? Yes, the water in the lake was not flowing, it was only rising. Evidently the dam still held. He ran along it till he reached the narrowest part of it, twenty feet wide between water-covered valley and sharply descending ravine. The short separation between Picker, Waters and the Kicking Horse! The water in the lake was within three feet of the crest. The rain was coming down steadily. He could realize by the water level where he stood that it was but leaping the top of the dam now, or a little above it. He had five minutes—ten at most. He was still in time. The thoughts came to him as he ran. And as he saw the place again he made his instant plan.

He laid the dynamite down just as Murphy and Funnaro reached him and stood muttering, their heavy breathing, the sweat running down their faces, evidencing their exhaustion. From Murphy, who had been the faster, Mende took the two tripod legs, stout oak staves about an inch and a half thick, with sharp metal points. He jumped them down into the ground about five feet from the edge of the Kicking Horse ravine and about fifteen feet apart.

"Holes, there," he shouted, "deep enough for five cartridges."

Funnaro nodded. He knew, exactly what to do. Murphy had often seen the explosive gang at work. He was quick-witted and he had only to follow the Italian's actions. The work was simple. Seizing their spades, the two men cut into the sod, using the pick to dislodge small boulders and break up the earth. The soil was light and porous, and it had been well soaked by the rain. After they had made an excavation about two feet deep, they laid aside their shovels, and with the iron range pole as a starter and the bigger tripod stakes to follow, they made two deep holes in the ground, forcing the pole and then the stake into the earth, which the continuous rain tended to soften more and more. They made these holes about four feet deep below the excavation, driving in and twisting and churning the stakes by main strength.

They could by no means have accomplished this save for the softening action of the rain and the furious energy they applied. They had been working since four in the morning at the dam, they had made that difficult run at headlong speed, yet they labored breath to call challengingly and provocatively, and to set forth their progress each to the other. In almost less time than it takes to tell it, they had completed the holes and so informed the engineer triumphantly.

Mende, as usual, had reserved to himself the more dangerous, if less arduous task. Covering himself, which Big Murphy's discarded slicker, which he felt over him like a shelter tent as he knelt down, he opened the box of detonators, selected one, and attached the fuse in position carefully. Then

True Secret of Keeping Youthful Looking

(The Beauty Seeker.)
"The real secret of keeping young-looking and beautiful," says a well-known hygienist, "is to keep the liver and bowels normal and active. Without these, no permanent waste products remain in the system, polluting the blood and leading to various diseases, skin eruptions, etc. One becomes flabby, obese, nervous, mentally sluggish, dull-eyed, wrinkled and sallow of face."

"But to get liver and bowels working as they ought, without producing evil after-effects, has been the problem. Fortunately, there is a prescription of unquestioned merit, which may now be had in convenient tablet form. Its value is due largely to an ingredient derived from the humble May apple, or Podophyllum, has been called 'irresponsible' because of its effectiveness—though, of course, it is not to be classed with the real poison of medicinal origin. There is no habit-forming cocaine in 'Senreco' tablets—there is the 'May apple'—and it is not followed by weakness or exhaustion. On the contrary, these Senreco vegetable tablets, which may be prepared from any druggist, will give you a revelation to any constipated, liver-troubled person."

Senreco Tablets conquer constipation—liven up a lazy liver—banish biliousness—

He unfolded the paper about one of the cartridges and placed the detonator, wrapping the paper around it then after the way with the greatest care.

The men rapidly but carefully cut into the covering of the cartridges and lowered four cartridges down one hole, forcing them gently into place with the butt ends of the tripod stake and compressing them so that they filled the holes completely. Then Mende placed his two prepared sticks with the detonators on top of the other four. He cut the fuse to the proper length in each case, and, keeping it carefully covered with the raincoat, he held it while the others filled in the holes and the excavations and carefully tamped down the earth. All that remained was the lighting of the fuse. And then? Would the dynamite go off? With fuses it was uncertain in its action at best, and although these fuses were supposed to be so prepared as to be independent of weather conditions, more often than not rain spoiled a blast. If this blast failed it was good-by dam—good-by everything.

MOOSE LODGE FIVE LOSES ROUGH GAME TO B. & O. QUINTET

Scores Are Close for Three Periods, Then B. & O. Takes Game, 22-18.

HANNIGAN RAILROAD STAR

He Makes 18 of the Baltimore & Ohio Teams' Scores: Too Much Football Playing Losses for Moose When Fouls Are Called; Miller Weak on Fouls.

In a closely contested game last evening the Moose Club team was defeated by the Baltimore & Ohio team, 22-18. Until the last quarter of play the score did not vary more than a few points. The Moose practically lost the game by numerous fouls they made, giving Hannigan 42 chances for free scores. He tossed in 16 and also made a field goal, making as many points himself as did the entire Moose team.

The Moose prepared for the game, confident of winning, and had it not been for Hannigan on the Baltimore & Ohio team they probably would. Too much football playing mixed in with basketball rules, didn't go, with Referee Wall, however, and he called all fouls.

With Hannigan defeating them by his foul shooting ability, the Moose team played him hard. Martray was called to the bench by Captain Mercereux, but that didn't remedy matters any for as soon as he took Martray's place, Mercereux began to mix it with Hannigan. The side thrusters between these two did not end until Referee Wall ordered both men from the game.

Mercereux agreed to leave, saying he had a sub. Hannigan said he didn't have a sub, but picking out a few in the rules, which permits a player ordered from the game to be reinstated, he left the floor and came back on himself.

Moose foul shooters were away off form. Had a better foul shot than Miller been available the score might have been different. He made but five out of seventeen and Mercereux made only three out of fourteen.

The Moose appeared on the floor in bright red jerseys clothed by a white band bearing the name Moose. The Baltimore & Ohio team has not yet received uniforms. All regulation suits by teams in the league have been ordered by S. B. Dobbie. Twelve inch baskets have been substituted for the six inch, and this caused players to be less accurate in shooting field goals.

The game next Friday will be between the Broad Ford team and the Elks as scheduled. The two South Connelville girls' teams will play the preliminary game. The score: MOOSE, B. & O. Getelo forward Hannigan have greeted Helen Holmes, the railroad girl, now known as the fearless film star in her brand new serial or chapter picture, "A Lass of the Lumberlands." This is the greatest serial ever released by the Mutual company and its exchanges have it booked almost two years hence. This picture is so new that the last chapters have not yet been pictured. Helen Holmes is known to almost every person who attends the movies because she is the girl who takes such desperate chances with fate that there is a catch in the spectators' throat from the time of her first appearance until the end of the episode. She has many imitators but she is in a class all her own, principally because no other woman will leap from one moving train to another from a Pullman car to a fast moving automobile, leap from a draw bridge 165 feet, and a thousand and one other feats that make her pictures one continuous thrill. The manager of the Arcade is so confident that Miss Holmes will please that he extends an invitation for all ladies of this vicinity to visit the Arcade today free, and see what one of the weaker sex can really do. Eugene Mack will also be on the screen in a screaming farce.

"NINA, THE FLOWER GIRL"—A Triangle-Fine Arts drama, with Bessie Love, the screen star in the leading role, is a wonderfully attractive feature today. Accompanied by Director Lloyd Ingraham, Bessie Love made several visits to an institution for the blind near Los Angeles, Cal. for the purpose of observing the appearance and actions of those thus afflicted, so that her acting in the role of a blind girl might be truly natural. In "Nina, the Flower Girl," Miss Love is seen as a blind girl whose sight is restored through the kindness of wealthy people, who stop in the street one day to buy her tray of flowers. The love story of the play concerns Nina and Jimmie, a crippled newsboy, whom she believes to be as straight and strong as Apollo. Jimmie's joy is "PATRIA."
